MARKING CRITERIA

ARTICLE TOPIC

For this year's competition we are asking you to write an article/blog for publication in the Nottinghamshire Law Society's Bulletin.

You can choose from one of the following legal topic areas:

- What lessons should the legal profession take from the Post Office Horizon IT enquiry?
- What do you think should be the top three priorities for the new Lord Chancellor, The Right Hon. Shabana Mahmood MP and why?
- Which three of the UN Sustainable Development Goals should lawyers prioritise? Why?

Please note, these are the topic areas and do not need to dictate the title of your article. You are free to give your article a title of your choosing.

The overall marking will be out of 60, with three criteria, each scoring a maximum of 20 points.

The three criteria are as follows:

1. Structure and presentation /20 points

Poor structure, grammar, spelling, punctuation etc, would justify a lower mark. Good use of language, a user-friendly structure e.g. one that is concise and has a clearly defined title, introduction, main body and conclusion will attract a higher mark.

2. Content /20 points

Does the article engage with the topic clearly and is the content presented in a concise, accurate, and informative way? Is the article written in a way that is suitable for its intended target audience? Does the article provide insight into the topic area, express appropriate opinion and/or commentary and is the information relevant and up to date?

3. Creativity and Originality /20 points

In terms of overall presentation and content, is there something that marks the article out and makes it stand out from others?

Hints and Tips

The following hints and tips may be useful to bear in mind when drafting your article:

- Choose a catchy title.
- Think about your target audience – bear in mind this article will be published in the Nottinghamshire Law Society Bulletin. The Bulletin is distributed to the Nottinghamshire Law Society membership which comprises legal professionals from across the county.
- Research and present facts that support your article. Some examples of research you can gather include:
 - ✓ Statistics
 - ✓ Quotes/opinions from legal sources on the topic area
 - ✓ References to recent events or developments in the topic area
 - ✓ Resources that a user might find helpful
- Your article should comprise of a title; introduction; main body of the article; and a conclusion.
- Make sure you proofread to check for punctuation and grammatical errors and do not rely on the spelling and grammar function.
- Your article should be concise, accurate and informative. Clarity is crucial for the success of your writing. It is better to make a few points succinctly and clearly than making a lot of points that may cause the reader to lose focus or interest.
- You may wish to refer to popular legal publications such as the Law Gazette, Solicitors Journal, New Law Journal for stylistic inspiration.
